JASP: Experience a Fresh Way to Do Statistics

BOOTH 402

jasp-stats.org

Visit us and experience JASP, a statistical software package unlike any other. It is free and open-source, it comes with an attractive user interface, and it includes both Bayesian and classical analyses. With JASP it is easy to conduct analyses, save results, and share your findings with students and colleagues. Moreover, JASP allows you to annotate your output, thereby benefiting reviewers, collaborators, students, and your future self. JASP produces APA-formatted tables and publication-ready figures that you can directly copy-paste in your Word document. Standard analyses are available in the main menu, and specialized analyses can be invoked by loading dedicated modules. Designed with the user in mind, JASP provides immediate output and dynamically updates the results as you alter input options. Certain elements of JASP are reminiscent of SPSS — data are organized in a spreadsheet; variables can be dragged and dropped, option boxes can be ticked — but other elements are entirely novel. JASP was created because we believe that statistical analyses should be inclusive, free, and easy to execute. JASP has an online forum for questions, a YouTube channel for tutorial videos, a GitHub page for feature requests, and a quickly expanding group of fans and contributors. When you pay us a visit, we will give you the JASP tour and explain our philosophy and our plans for world domination.
